NATIVE IN BIG CASES

HENRY WOLF BIKLE REPRESENTS BIG RAILROADS.

Opposed By Ex-Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes Representing New R. R. Features.

Henry Wolf Bikle, a native of Gettysburg, son of Prof. P. M. Bikle, of Gettysburg College, and a graduate of the college, and who started the study of the law in the law offices of Wm. and Wm. Arch McClean, took a prominent part in an argument at Washington, D. C., last Thursday, representing the Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio, New York Central and other railroads and having as the opposing counsel, Charles E. Hughes, former Secretary of State. The legal proceedings were described as follows:

Final arguments were heard on Thursday by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the application of the New York, Pittsburgh and Chicago Railroad for permission to build a new line between Pittsburgh and Easton.

Charles E. Hughes, former secretary of state, appeared for L. E. Loree and the Harriman estate, principal supporters of the new railroad, while Henry Wolf Bikle, general attorney of the Pennsylvania, represented also the Baltimore and Ohio, New York Central and other lines in opposition.

Action of the commission examiners in recommending that permission to build be not granted at present was challenged by Mr. Hughes, who explained the possibility that a new and direct line should be developed from New York to Chicago. Its feasibility, he said, was demonstrated by the late E. H. Harriman.

Touching upon the opposition of other railroads, Mr. Hughes asserted that the line was not proposed in enmity to them. Its construction, he added, would be necessitated by the growth of traffic. The plans contemplated, he said, the elimination of steep grades, standardization of operating facilities and the accomplishment of transportation at 40 per cent. less cost than through traffic now meets.

In conclusion Mr. Hughes declared any delay in granting permission to build the road would create a situation in which "the chances are the line would be lost" because of the right of way, which tentatively has been selected would be "broken into somewhere."

Mr. Bikle said the new line was estimated to cost $300,000,000 and would need at least 1,000,000 tons of freight a year. There were no arrangements now existing for linking it up with the east or west, and it had no plan for actually obtaining entrance into Pittsburgh, he asserted.

"At the present time," argued Mr. Bikle, "railroads are not earning a fair return on their own capital investments, and since the applicant does not expect to develop traffic, but merely to share in the existing traffic, it is clear that the return on the railroad investment would be reduced by its entering the transportation field. This would tend to interfere with the adequacy of railroad service."

"The line is not necessary. The most economical way to meet future needs of this country is by expansion and the intensified use of existing facilities. The building of the line would be in direct opposition to the present movement toward consolidating the railroads of the country."
